- Oliver: Hey, how's Iceland?
- Sophie: I love it.
- Oliver: Oh, what a surprise!
- Sophie: It is actually. I don't normally like camping!
- Oliver: If I had the opportunity to visit places like that, I wouldn't complain!
- Sophie: What's the matter with you today, Ollie?
- Oliver: Ah, nothing really.
- Sophie: If you don't tell me, I'll just keep asking ...
- Oliver: Hmm. Yesterday, you were so excited, you didn't ask about my exam!
- Sophie: Oh, Ollie! I'm so sorry. You're more important to me than camping and volcanoes!
- Oliver: Well, it doesn't always feel like it.
- Sophie: If I promise to travel less, will you forgive me?
- Oliver: No. Because you won't travel less. You love it. And if you travelled less because of me, I'd feel worse. So ... it's not an option.
- Sophie: You don't make it easy! Seriously, honey, I don't think I knew about the exam. If I'd known, I would have asked, you know that.
- Oliver: Well, anyway. Have you been near that volcano? What's its name?
- Sophie: Even if I had three days of classes, I wouldn't be able to say it, I don't think. Wait, I can't say it unless I read it – Eyjafjallajökull. There are about 30 active volcanoes in Iceland; the eruption in 2010 of Eyja ... of that volcano really wasn't so serious. If it hadn't affected flights, we wouldn't have heard much about it. There's a bigger volcano near it – with a shorter name too – Katla. I've been to see that. The landscape here's awesome ... You can't imagine what it's like.
- Oliver: No? Well, I'll never go unless you take me.
- Sophie: Darling, please ...
- Oliver: Sorry. What's it like?
- Sophie: It's beautiful. Water, rock, ice, lava, geysers ... there aren't many trees, obviously. I'll send photos later.
- Oliver: Look, do you want to speak to Daisy?
- Sophie: Ollie, love?
- Oliver: I'll be OK. Let's talk tomorrow.
- Sophie: OK. Hi, Daisy.
- Daisy: Hi, Mum.
